

Our Time Is Now

Race and Modernity in Postcolonial Guatemala

JULIE GIBBINGS

University of Edinburgh

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

List of Maps, Figures, and Tables	page ix
Acknowledgments	xi
Introduction: History Will Write Our Names	i
PART I TRANSLATING MODERNITIES
1 To Live without King or Castle: Maya Patriarchal Liberalism on the Eve of a New Era, 1860–1871	35
2 Possessing Sentiments and Ideas of Progress: Coffee Planting, Land Privatization, and the Liberal Reform, 1871–1886	75
3 Indolence Is the Death of Character: The Making of Race and Labor, 1886–1898	111
4 El Q’eq Roams at Night: Plantation Sovereignty and Racial Capitalism, 1898–1914	150
PART II ASPIRATIONS AND ANXIETIES OF UNFULFILLED MODERNITIES
5 On the Throne of Minerva: The Making of Urban Modernities, 1908–1920	191
6 Freedom of the Indian: Maya Rights and Citizenship in a Democratic Experiment, 1920–1931	231
7 Possessing Tezulutlán: Splitting National Time in Dictatorship, 1931–1939	268

8	Now Owners of Our Land: Nationalism, History, and Memory in Revolution, 1939–1954	311
	Conclusion	357
	Glossary	373
	Index	377

Maps, Figures, and Tables

Maps

0.1 Political map of Guatemala	3
1.1 Political map of Verapaz, c. 1860	40
1.2 Map of Alta Verapaz	52

Figures

2.1 Sketch of Chitaña	page 94
4.1 Two young Q'echi' men posing for the photographer	160
5.1 Alta Verapaz, 1928	205
5.2 Cobán's central plaza, c. 1890	210
5.3 Cobán's central plaza, c. 1920s	210
5.4 Minerva temple, Cobán	218
7.1 Two indigenous men from Alta Verapaz	291
7.2 Indigenous beauty queen, Feria de Cobán (1936)	305

Table

3.1 Number of petitions for land in San Pedro Carchá and Cobán	page 145
--	-----------------