

Contents

Introduction: The Location of German Literature	1
1. Crusaders, Infidels, and the Birth of a Nation	15
Wolfram's Parzival and the Making of Europe	15
Early Modern Nationalism and the Ottoman Empire	32
Baroque Orientalisms: Grimmelshausen's Simplicissimus and Lohenstein's Arminius	39
2. Romantic Orientalism and the Absence of Empire	61
Herder's Historicism	64
Novalis: A Provincial Cosmopolitan	83
The Bildung of the German Nation	101
Linguistic Nationalism and the East	105
Inventing Germanistik and Making Wolfram German	111
Goethe's Orientalism: Between Essence and Irony	118
3. Fascist Orientalism and Its Discontents	133
Mann, Baeumler, and Bachofen: The Dark Side of Romanticism	133
Tiptoeing toward Democracy: Mann's Sexual Politics	138
Symbolic Geographies on the Magic Mountain	146
Botho Strauß: Apocalypse Now	162

4. The Nearest East	177
Germany's Eastern Frontier	177
Teutonic Knights, Prussian Patriots, Nazi Ideologues	181
Eichendorff's Christian Soldiers	188
At Home on the Border: Heimat , Nation, and Empire in Freytag's Poetic Realism	196
Günter Grass and the Literature of Migration	209
Conclusion: Toward a "Bastard" Literature?	225
Özdamar's Hybrid Heroines	228
Michael Roes's Postmodern Orientalism	231
Coda: Literature in an Age of Cultural Studies	237
Notes	245
Works Cited	277
Primary Literature	277
Secondary Literature	283
Index	305