

Shellac in Visual and Sonic Culture

Unsettled Matter

Elodie A. Roy

Amsterdam University Press

Table of Contents

List of illustrations	7
Acknowledgements	9
Introduction: From material culture to the materials of culture	11
1. Sheen: Early stories and circulation of shellac	39
2. Crackle: Assembling the record	63
3. Mirrors: Phono-fetishism and intersensory visions	103
4. Detonations: Shellac at war	139
5. Shards: Waste, obsolescence, and contemporary remediations	169
Conclusion: Sonic sculptures	201
Bibliography	217
Index	233

List of illustrations

Figure 1	Shellac window display, India House, London, 1936. Author's picture. National Archives, UK.	12
Figure 2	Back of an oval mirror of black shellac, decorated with seated woman and cherub in front of a castle, nineteenth century. Science Museum Group Collection © The Board of Trustees of the Science Museum, London.	58
Figure 3	Industrial drawing of a gramophone record press designed by the Manchester firm Francis Shaw & Co. Author's collection.	91
Figure 4	'Le gramophone' ('The gramophone'), wood engraving by Jean-Émile Laboureur, c. 1918–1921. Bibliothèque nationale de France.	147
Figure 5	Seven Chakras (Twice) , Chris Dorsett, graphite over digital scans of recordings, 2011 © Chris Dorsett.	184
Figure 6	Carafe (shellac, bamboo charcoal), Forgotten Collection , 2 nd edition, 2016 © Studio Lapatsch Unger.	189
Figure 7	Shellac shards, Rea Garden, Birmingham, 2010 © Graham Dunning.	196